Sky Faces — A Glimpse IV: The One That Stood There

A formation observed within a rapidly shifting sequence of clouds. Most frames dissolved into indistinct shapes, but this one held long enough to be captured clearly.

In the wider view, the figure appears in the upper right portion of the sky. In the cropped view, the shape becomes more defined, suggesting a face or character-like presence.

Detail (Cropped)

Some may see a familiar face. Others will see only clouds. Both can be true.

This one felt like it was there on purpose, just long enough to be seen.
